AVOID TRAFFIC - GET A FEEL FOR CHICAGO

"Leave your chauffeur at home and ride with us" is not a CTA slogan, but it could be. Carl Mottek, president of Hilton Hotels, decided not to ride his chauffeur-driven limousine, but took CTA's train service from O'Hare Airport to the Loop (downtown). The world traveler did this "to get a feel for the city," and he loved it, according to Irv Kupciet, Chicago Sun-Times.

It's a way to see the city as it can only be seen from a CTA 'L' (elevated) train. Your trip starts in one of the world's most beautiful subway stations, under Terminal #4, and quickly takes you to street level. There you'll see modern office buildings, hotels and businesses, which have sprung up like mushrooms along the O'Hare Corridor, created by the CTA rapid transit extension and the Kennedy Expressway.

Within a few minutes, as you whiz by congested traffic on the expressway, you'll pass through some of Chicago's far northwest side neighborhoods. As you leave the Jefferson Park station, you'll start to see some of the industrial areas along the Chicago and North Western railroad tracks. Next you'll head back underground to a modern section of subway beneath the Avondale and Logan Square neighborhoods.

From there your train climbs up to part of Chicago's original 'L' structure, where you'll travel at a height of about 20 feet, past the third story of most adjacent buildings. As you ride along this section of track, you'll see some of Chicago's most famous skyscrapers, such as the John Hancock Center and Sears Tower.

Completing your journey downtown, you'll descend into another subway tunnel that will take you to all five Dearborn subway stations in the Loop. The main stops are beneath Dearborn Street, which runs parallel to State Street one block east. Here you may exit at one of three stations -- Washington, Monroe or Jackson -- which all share the same continuous platform.

As you step off the train, you'll see signs above escalators and stairways along the platform which indicate the east-west streets that can be reached from each location. These exits lead to a mezzanine level where ticket agents are generally available to answer questions about directions. Other stairways then lead from mezzanine to street level.

CTA's O'Hare route trains provide quick, convenient, economical, direct service from the airport to downtown Chicago in about 35 minutes. Both 'A' and 'B' trains stop en route at appropriately designated stations, but all trains make all stops downtown in the Dearborn Street subway.

The fare is only $1, or $1.25 with a transfer. A transfer allows the rider to change to other rapid transit routes or to bus routes without having to pay an additional fare.

Most hotels, cultural attractions, government or commercial buildings shown on the downtown map are easy to reach, either by walking or by transferring to a bus, from locations near stops in the subway at Lake Transfer, Washington, Monroe, Jackson or LaSalle stations.

Generally, locations in the area north of downtown near Michigan Avenue may be reached by transferring to a No. 151 bus northbound on State at Washington Street. No. 146 buses also operate on State south to three lakefront museums near the downtown area. No. 6 buses operate south on State and via Lake Shore Drive (Mondays through Saturdays) to the Museum of Science and Industry. No. 1 buses operate east on Jackson to locations south along Michigan Avenue.

On Sundays and holidays from May through September, three Culture Bus routes, with a commentator on each bus, take riders to more than 30 cultural attractions on the South, North and West sides from a boarding place in front of the Art Institute, on Michigan at Adams.

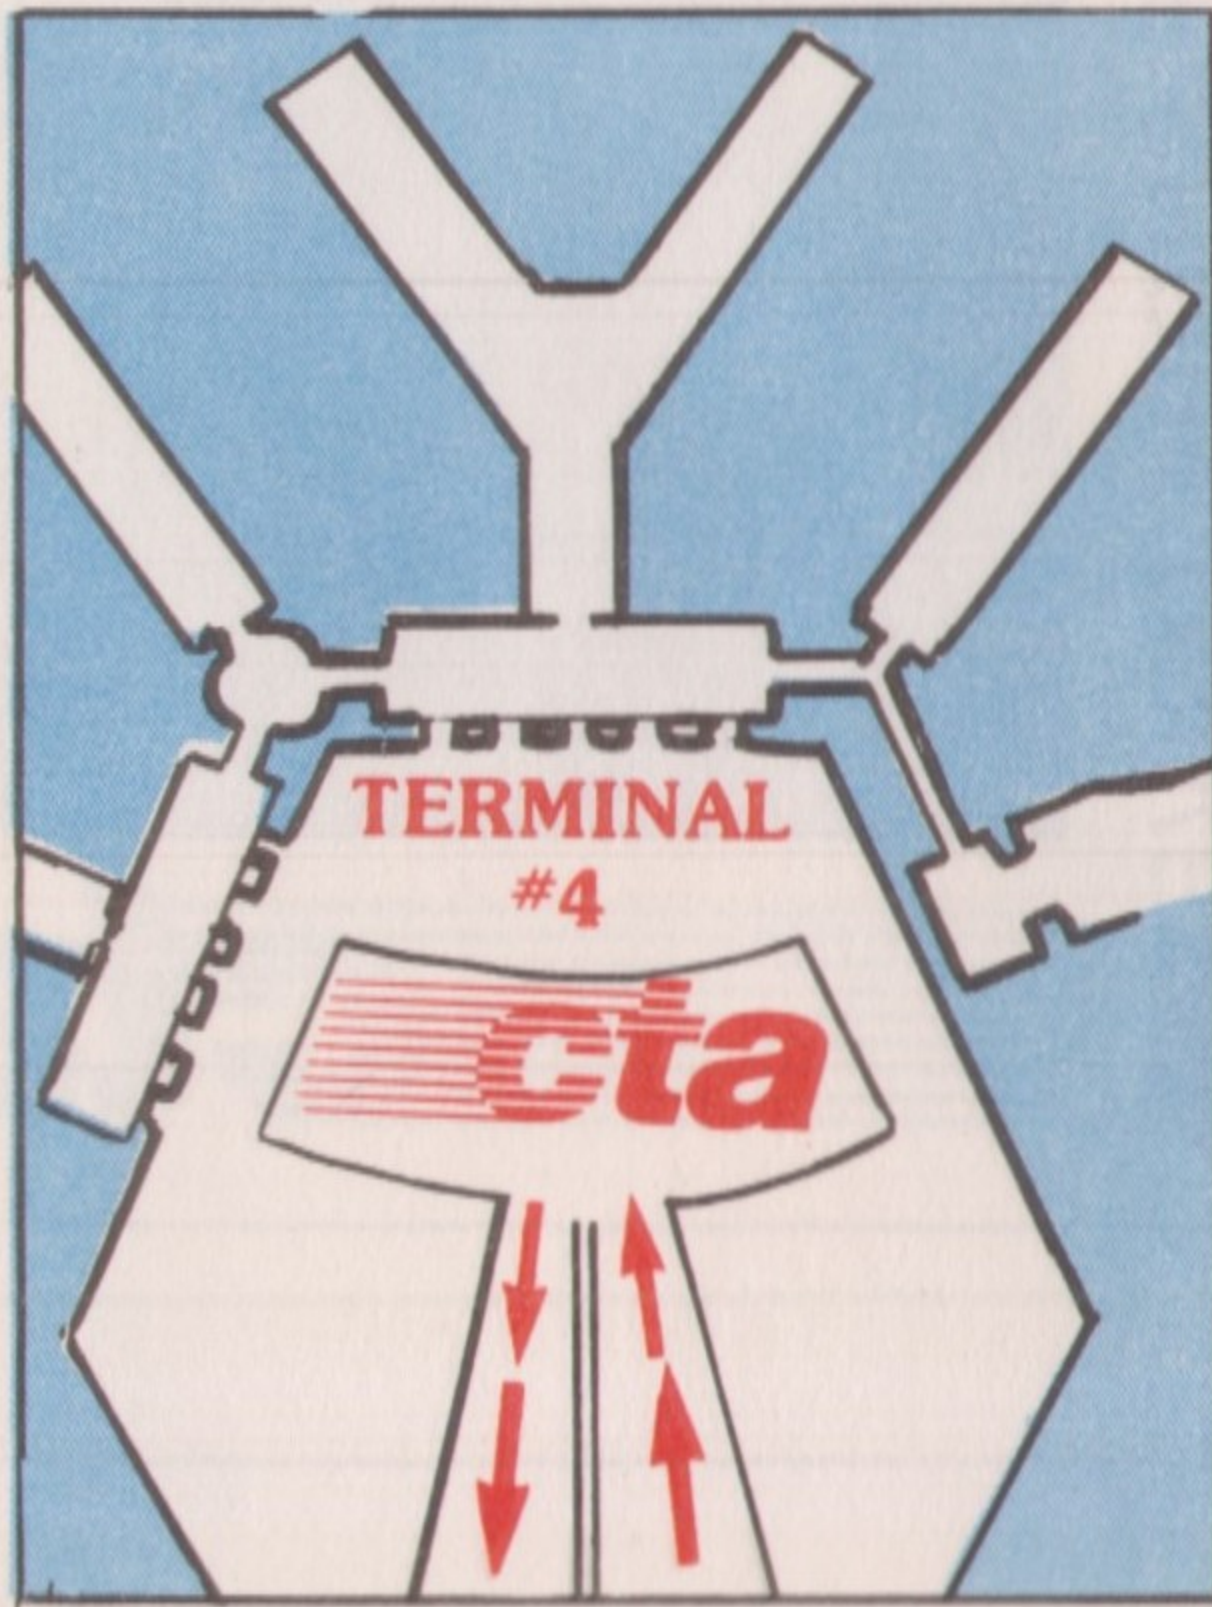

Amtrak intercity trains and certain Metra commuter lines operate out of Union Station, which may be reached by transferring from the subway at Monroe to any bus westbound on Adams Street. The North Western commuter station may be reached from the Washington subway stop and westbound buses on Madison Street. Electric commuter trains of the Illinois Central Gulf and South Shore Line, terminating at the ICG station at Randolph/Michigan, may be reached by leaving the subway at Washington through the Randolph exit and walking east three blocks to Michigan Avenue. The LaSalle Street commuter station is south across Congress Parkway from the LaSalle subway stop.

The Greyhound bus terminal is east across Clark Street from the exit from the Lake Transfer subway stop. The Trailways bus terminal is 1 1/2 blocks east along Randolph Street from the Randolph exit from the Washington subway stop.

Midway Airport may be reached by remaining on board a Douglas 'B' train to the street-level station at Cicero Avenue, and transferring to a No. 54B bus southbound on Cicero.
